GREATER COLUMBIA COMMUNITY RELATIONS COUNCIL

Last month I had the honor of being appointed to the Greater Columbia Community Relations Council by the Columbia City Council. The Greater Columbia Community Relations Council was formed in 1964 to calm racial tensions in the Midlands (born out of the "Committee of 50," a biracial advisory group designed to promote interracial understanding and ease the transition towards an integrated society).

SPRING CLEANING

March 20th was officially the first day of spring this year. Along with warmer weather, dreadful pollen, and baseball, the spring season also brings the age-old habit of spring-cleaning. Spring-cleaning is considered to be the practice of thoroughly cleaning a house in the springtime. The tradition of spring-cleaning is also used metaphorically for any heavy duty cleaning or organizing.

Each of my introduction letters for my newsletters this year has discussed the topic of self-improvement. In my January letter, I encouraged you all to make this year the best year ever. In my February/March letter, I encouraged you all to jump back on the path towards accomplishing your goals if you found yourself veering off course. In sticking with my themes regarding self-improvement, I want to throw a spring-cleaning twist and want to encourage you to take a personal inventory of your life and conduct some spring-cleaning of anything that needs to be removed from your life.

So how do you perform spring-cleaning on your own life? You remove yourself from the people, thoughts, places, environments, and things that are toxic and not beneficial to your inner peace or wellbeing.

Every spring I find myself always struggling on whether to throw something away that I no longer need. These items generally serve no purpose in my life today and their usefulness has long run its course. After going back and forth, I typically feel better after ridding myself of the item. All of a sudden I find that after removing the worthless item from my life I have more room to add something else of value in place of where the thing that was taking up space once stood.

Ridding yourself of the toxic things in your life can have the same effect. After removing the valueless environment, people, places, and things from your life, you will find room to replace them with things that add immense value.

So this spring, don't just clean your house—clean your life. You won't regret it!

SOUTH CAROLINA BAR YOUNG LAWYERS DIVISION PROTECTING OUR YOUTH MASS DAY

This year's Protecting Our Youth Mass Day was a tremendous success! Protecting Our Youth Mass Day is a program sponsored by the South Carolina Bar that exists for the purpose of educating at-risk high school students on the consequences of their actions and choices. Members of this committee organize programs typically in the form of panel discussions about various topics, including prosecuting students as adults, repeat offenders, new DUI laws and drug offenses. Programs are held throughout the state and conducted with assistance from the S.C. Department of Juvenile Justice, Children's Law Center, the Bar's Children's Law Committee and various other community organizations.

Thank you to all of those who contributed to making this year's event one of the best!

GREATER COLUMBIA COMMUNITY RELATIONS COUNCIL

Last month I had the honor of being appointed to the Greater Columbia Community Relations Council by the Columbia City Council. The Greater Columbia Community Relations Council was formed in 1964 to calm racial tensions in the Midlands (born out of the “Committee of 50,” a biracial advisory group designed to promote interracial understanding and ease the transition towards an integrated society).

The mission of the Greater Columbia Community Relations Council is to promote harmony, mutual respect, and justice through dialogue, education, programs, and resources. In doing so, we hope to foster an atmosphere of collaboration, unity, and transparency among our very diverse population.

The goal of the Greater Columbia Community Relations Council is to serve in an advisory capacity to leaders and officials from the faith, education, business, neighborhoods, media, law enforcement, local government and supporting agencies. We believe that honest dialogue and active participation will lead to understanding, acceptance, mutual respect and eventually inclusion for everyone.

I look forward to serving our community on the Greater Columbia Community Relations Council and will be sure to keep you all informed of the work that I am doing in this capacity.
